Case No. LA 02-30769 SB

CHAPTER 11

SECOND AMENDED OPINION
ON PLAN CONFIRMATION AND MOTION TO DISMISS (CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUES)

DATE: May 23, 2003
TIME: 10:00 A.M.
CTRM.: 1575 (Roybal)

I. Introduction

In this case Pierce Marshall, as trustee for three family trusts (collectively referred to as "Pierce") opposes confirmation of the chapter 11 plan proposed by the debtors, who are his brother J. Howard Marshall, III ("Howard") and Howard's wife Ilene O. Marshall. Pierce also moves to dismiss the case. Pierce supports both of these positions with the argument that this case falls outside the bankruptcy jurisdiction of the federal courts under the Bankruptcy Clause of the United States Constitution, because the debtors are solvent under a balance sheet test. Notably, Pierce has declined to file a claim on behalf of the trusts (or on his own behalf) in this case.

The court finds that the balance sheet test for insolvency was unknown in United States bankruptcy law until 1898, when balance sheet insolvency first entered United States bankruptcy law. Prior thereto, insolvency in the bankruptcy context always meant liquidity (or equity) insolvency.

The court further holds that the Bankruptcy Clause of the United States Constitution does not require that a debtor in bankruptcy be insolvent under any test, and that the debtors in this case may constitutionally invoke remedies provided under chapter 11.

II. Relevant Facts

The relevant facts in this case are set forth in the court's recently issued opinion on the non-constitutional issues involved in the pending plan confirmation and motion to dismiss. See In re Marshall, ___ B.R. ___, (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 2003). The filing of this bankruptcy case was precipitated in part by a judgment in favor of Pierce and against Howard in the Texas probate case of their father J. Howard Marshall II ("J. Howard"). The judgment, which was then on appeal, was for $11 million plus costs and interest at ten percent. By the filing date of the bankruptcy petition, this debt totaled more than $12 million.

As amended, the debtors' schedules show assets worth $13,138,311.38 and liquidated debts of $13,914,112.39. In addition to the valued assets, the schedules disclose interests in a revocable family trust, claims made in the probate estate of Howard's father, J. Howard, and an interest in the Eleanor P. Stevens Irrevocable Gift Trust (which is described in detail in a full-page exhibit). In addition to the quantified debts, the schedules list nonpriority debts in unknown amounts owing to Wells Fargo Bank Texas, the City of Pasadena, a Dallas law firm and the Marshall Museum & Trust.

In addition to the $12 million judgment, Howard had been named as a defendant in a $5 million lawsuit in Louisiana. Furthermore, Pierce's lawyer also sent a letter to Howard's lawyer on May 20, 2002 providing substantial detail for another claim against Howard exceeding $100 million.

The court set a claims bar date of November 15, 2002. Pierce declined to file a proof of claim in this case. Pierce has moved to dismiss this case and has objected to the confirmation of the debtors' chapter 11 plan as amended.

Pierce makes both statutory and constitutional objections to the confirmation of the chapter 11 plan proposed by debtors Howard and Ilene Marshall. The court has previously found that the statutory requirements for confirmation are satisfied, and that the case should not be dismissed on good faith grounds. See Marshall, at ____.

III. Constitutionality of a Chapter 11 Case for a Solvent Debtor

Pierce contends that the debtors' assets exceed their liabilities as of the date of filing, and that in consequence they were solvent under a balance sheet test. The court finds that determining the accuracy of this contention would be very difficult and very time consuming in this case. While for some purposes in bankruptcy it is necessary to make such a determination,² in this case no such determination is necessary. For the purposes of the constitutional analysis, the court assumes without deciding that the debtors were solvent, in the balance sheet sense, when they filed this case.

As a statutory matter, it is clear that the bankruptcy law does not require that a bankruptcy debtor be insolvent, either in the balance sheet sense (more liabilities than assets) or in the liquidity sense (unable to pay the debtor's debts as they come due), to file a chapter 11 case or proceed to ¹Unless otherwise indicated, all chapter, section and rule references are to the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. §§ 101-1330 (West 2003) and to the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure, Rules 1001-9036.

1 the confirmation of a plan of reorganization. The 2 Ninth Circuit firmly rejected such a view in Sylmar
3 Plaza where it held, "insolvency is not a 4 prerequisite to a finding of good faith under § 5 1129(a)." Platinum Capital, Inc. v. Sylmar Plaza, 10 confirmation).

11 Pierce does not contest that insolvency is 12 not a statutory requirement for filing a voluntary 13 bankruptcy case under chapter 11. Instead, he 14 argues that the Bankruptcy Clause of the United 15 States Constitution can only be invoked by a 16 bankrupt debtor who is insolvent under a 17 balance sheet test. Pierce argues that the 18 constitutional grant of authority to Congress to 19 enact "uniform Laws on the subject of 20 Bankruptcies throughout the United States"³ is 21 limited to regulating the affairs of debtors who are 22 insolvent in this sense.

23 Pierce argues that there must be some 24 content to the Bankruptcy Clause in the 25 Constitution. In general terms, this court agrees.
26 On this point Pierce is on solid ground. Congress 27 is not free to define the contours of bankruptcy without any limitations: the bankruptcy terrain clearly must have some boundaries. See, e.g., Continental Illinois Nat'l Bank & Trust. v. Chicago,
Rock Island & Pac. Ry. Co., 294 U.S. 648, 669-70, 55 S.Ct. 595 (1935).

28 The test, according to Pierce, is that the 29 Constitution must require that a debtor in a 30 bankruptcy case be insolvent under a balance 31 sheet test. Insofar as the Bankruptcy Code 32 permits a debtor to file a bankruptcy case who is 33 balance sheet solvent, according to Pierce, the law 34 falls outside the powers granted by the 35 Constitution to the federal government. In such a 36 circumstance, the Constitution, and not the law, 37 must govern the case. See Marbury v. Madison, 38 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 178 (1803) ("If then . . . the 39 constitution is superior to any ordinary act of the 40 legislature; the constitution, and not such ordinary 41 act, must govern the case to which they both 42 apply.")

43 The court finds that neither balance sheet 44 insolvency nor liquidity insolvency is required for 45 the constitutional invocation of federal bankruptcy 46 jurisdiction. The limits on the application of the 47 Bankruptcy Clause lie elsewhere, not in balance 48 sheet insolvency.

49 ³U.S. CONST., art. 1, § 8, cl. 4.

50 As a preliminary matter, it is necessary to 51 distinguish the exercise of powers under the 52 Bankruptcy Clause from the exercise of 53 congressional powers under the Commerce Clause.
54 These two powers are closely related. See Railway
55 Labor Executives' Ass'n v. Gibbons, 455 U.S. 457, 56 465-66, 102 S.Ct. 1169 (1982). However, the 57 conditions for invoking the Commerce Clause are 58 different from those for invoking the Bankruptcy 59 Clause, and each has its own limitations. As the 60 Supreme Court has explained, "[u]nlike the 61 Commerce Clause, the Bankruptcy Clause itself 62 contains an affirmative limitation or restriction upon 63 Congress' power," and "if we were to hold that 64 Congress had the power to enact nonuniform 65 bankruptcy laws pursuant to the Commerce Clause, 66 we would eradicate from the Constitution a 67 limitation on the power of Congress to enact 68 bankruptcy laws." Id. at 468-69.

69 Setting aside the Commerce Clause, the 70 powers granted to Congress under the Bankruptcy 71 Clause are expanded by art. 1, § 8, cl. 18, which 72 grants Congress the power "To make all Laws 73 which shall be necessary and proper for carrying 74 into Execution the foregoing Powers . . ." See 75 Wright v. Union Central Life Ins. Co., 304 U.S. 502, 76 513, 58 S.Ct. 1025 (1938). Theoretically, this 77 provision might be invoked to support the use of the 78 Bankruptcy Clause in doubtful cases. However, the 79 Supreme Court has never in fact utilized this 80 approach to determine the constitutionality of 81 bankruptcy provisions.

82 The court assumes without deciding that 83 Congress was not exercising its Commerce Clause 84 or its Necessary and Proper Clause powers in 85 determining the qualifications for filing a bankruptcy 86 case. Thus the court's constitutional analysis in this 87 case is confined to the Bankruptcy Clause.

88 To analyze Pierce's argument, we examine 89 the understanding of the framers of the Constitution 90 at the time of its adoption, the history of bankruptcy 91 law in the United States and its predecessor 92 English statutes, and applicable Supreme Court 93 case law. We also examine Pierce's argument that, 94 insofar as the Bankruptcy Code permits a solvent
95 chapter 11 debtor to file a case and proceed to plan 96 confirmation, Congress has exceeded its 97 Bankruptcy Powers and has deprived him of 98 property without due process of law.

A. Definition of Insolvency

99 Before undertaking this analysis, we must 100 first address what Pierce means by "insolvency," 101 because this term has two commonly used

1 definitions in the bankruptcy context.

2 For the purposes of this argument, Pierce
3 urges the court to adopt the balance sheet
4 definition of solvency in § 101(32)(A), which states 5 in relevant part:

6 "insolvent" means . . . with 7 reference to an entity other than a 8 partnership and a municipality, 9 financial condition such that the 10 sum of such entity's debts is 11 greater than all of such entity's
12 property, at a fair valuation, 13 exclusive of –

14 (i) property transferred,
15 concealed, or removed with intent 16 to hinder, delay, or defraud such 17 entity's creditors; and 18 (ii) property that may be 19 exempted from property of the 20 estate

21 Section 101(32)(A) states the Bankruptcy Code 22 version of the balance sheet test for insolvency.⁴ 23 Under the non-bankruptcy version, a debtor is 24 insolvent where its liabilities exceed its assets as 25 shown on its balance sheet. See BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 799 (7th ed. 1999).

26 Section 101(32)(A) makes two 27 modifications to the usual balance sheet 28 insolvency test. First, the test requires the revision of balance sheet values to their "fair valuation." In contrast, a balance sheet prepared according to generally accepted accounting principles provides asset values at historical cost less any applicable depreciation or amortization. The "fair valuation" standard requires an adjustment in balance sheet values from historical cost to present market values. Second, the § 101(32)(A) definition excludes property that would otherwise appear on a balance sheet, but that is exempt under § 522 (providing exemptions for individual debtors).

29 The insolvency definition in § 101(32)(A) 30 is designed to govern the handful of technical uses 31 of this term in the Bankruptcy Code. In fact, 32 "insolvent" is used only ten times in the entire 33 statute, and in nine of those it is used to define 34 narrowly drawn rights under particular statutory 35 ⁴The 1898 Act has a similar definition of 36 insolvency. See 1898 Act, § 1(19). Unlike § 37 101(32)(A) of the Bankruptcy Code, § 1(19) 38 included exempt property in the calculation of 39 insolvency.

40 provisions. See § 365 (trustee may assume an 41 executory contract notwithstanding a default 42 relating to the debtor's insolvency); § 525 43 (protecting a debtor against discriminatory 44 treatment during prepetition insolvency); § 541 45 (forfeiture based on insolvency does not prevent 46 prepetition property from becoming property of the 47 estate); § 543 (court may consider interests of 48 equity holders of solvent debtor in determining 49 whether to require a custodian to turn over 50 property); § 545 (protecting a debtor from statutory 51 liens predicated upon insolvency); § 546 52 (authorizing certain reclamation rights to creditors 53 who have delivered certain goods to a debtor while 54 insolvent before the bankruptcy petition was filed); 55 § 547 (element of cause of action for preferential 56 transfer); § 548 (element of certain causes of action 57 for fraudulent transfers); § 553 (condition for 58 prohibiting a creditor setoff). None of these uses 59 sheds any light on the constitutional limits of the 60 Bankruptcy Clause.

61 The final use of "insolvency" in the 62 Bankruptcy Code occurs in § 109(c)(3), which 63 requires a municipality to be insolvent as a 64 condition of filing a bankruptcy case. The meaning 65 of "insolvency" in this provision is entirely different 66 from the balance sheet test,⁵ and is governed by § 67 101(32)(C), which states that "insolvent" means:

68 with reference to a municipality,
69 financial condition such that the 70 municipality is –

71 (i) generally not paying its debts as 72 they become due unless such 73 debts are the subject of a bona 74 fide dispute; or 75 (ii) unable to pay its debts as they become 76 due

77 This is known as the liquidity test for insolvency
78 (also known as the "equity" or the "cash flow" test),⁶ 79 and it is the most commonly used definition in the 80 ⁵Section 101(32)(B) also has a different definition of 81 insolvency for a partnership, which is a modified 82 version of the balance sheet test that takes into 83 account the partners' separate assets.

84 ⁶This definition is also used in § 303(h)(1), which 85 authorizes a court to order relief against an 86 involuntary debtor if, "the debtor is generally not 87 paying such debtor's debts as such debts become 88 due unless such debts are the subject of a bona 89 fide dispute"

1 bankruptcy context.⁷ This liquidity definition of 2 insolvency is the only one that has ever played a 3 role in qualifying as a debtor under United States 4 bankruptcy law.

5 It is not uncommon for debtors to be 6 solvent under the balance sheet test, and yet to 7 have severe financial problems. This court 8 frequently receives cases, filed under both chapter 9 7 and chapter 11 and especially under chapter 13 (a reorganization chapter for consumers), where the debtor is clearly solvent under a balance sheet test, but has substantial cash flow problems.⁸ The United States bankruptcy law is designed to provide relief from creditor pressures for debtors with cash flow difficulties, even where they are clearly solvent under a balance sheet test.

10 As to reorganizations under chapter 11, 11 there is substantial reason for Congress to decide 12 that a debtor should be eligible before the debtor 13 becomes insolvent under a balance sheet test.
14 The prospects for reorganizing a debtor in financial 15 difficulty are much better when the debtor is still 16 solvent than after it becomes insolvent. See 17 generally 1 COLLIER ON BANKRUPTCY ¶ 1.19[1]
(James William Moore ed., 14th ed. 1988) 18 [hereinafter COLLIER] (commenting on the 19 reorganization provisions of the 1898 Act, as amended by the Chandler Act). If a debtor must wait until it becomes insolvent to invoke the reorganization provisions under the bankruptcy law, substantial economic values will often be irretrievably lost. Congress certainly could legitimately decide that it is best for the economy of the United States to permit solvent debtors to reorganize under the bankruptcy law to preserve economic values.

20 An additional vice of a balance sheet test 21 as a criterion for admission to the bankruptcy 22 system is that substantial time is consumed in determining whether a debtor is in fact insolvent.

23 ⁷There are other, more sophisticated measures of 24 insolvency that are increasingly used in complex 25 business transactions. See e.g., Michael J.
Epstein, Director/Manager Liability and How to Avoid Furthering Insolvency, NABTALK, Summer
2003, at 23, 24. These measures of insolvency 26 have not found their way into United States bankruptcy laws.

27 ⁸Some bankruptcy courts also frequently see 28 chapter 12 cases where the debtor is quite solvent under a balance sheet test. However, chapter 12 cases are rare in the Central District of California.

This case is illustrative – litigation over the debtors' solvency has consumed a large amount of time and effort, and a determination of the debtors' insolvency has not yet been made more than a year after the filing.

If a reorganization is held up pending a determination of balance sheet insolvency, businesses will rarely be reorganized, and at least some of the reorganization value (the value of a business as reorganized as opposed to its liquidation value) will inevitably be lost. Indeed, this is the experience in countries that require insolvency, according to a balance sheet test, as a condition for admission to the bankruptcy system – businesses are generally not reorganizable, and substantial economic values are lost.⁹

Accordingly, the court finds that the balance sheet test is not the appropriate test for insolvency in evaluating Pierce's constitutional challenge in this case. However, assuming that Pierce has implicitly claimed that the liquidity test should also be applied by the court, the court proceeds to consider Pierce's constitutional challenge.

B. United States and English Bankruptcy Laws

The United States Congress has enacted five bankruptcy laws.¹⁰ The first was enacted in ⁹The World Bank recommends against the use of a balance sheet insolvency test as a qualification for bankruptcy. See WORLD BANK, PRINCIPLES AND GUIDELINES FOR EFFECTIVE INSOLVENCY AND CREDITOR RIGHTS SYSTEMS ¶ 90 (2001). Instead, if an insolvency test is to be adopted in a country, the World Bank recommends the liquidity test – the debtor's ability to pay debts as they come due. See id.

¹⁰At the time of the framing of the Constitution, the terms "bankruptcy" and "insolvency" were applied differently and had operated in different systems. Bankruptcy meant the action against malingerers debtors, insolvency relief for the honest but unfortunate debtor. See Sturges v. Crowninshield, 17 U.S. 122, 194-195 (1889) ("[T]he subject [of bankruptcies] is divisible in its nature into bankrupt and insolvent laws . . . [A]lthough the two systems have existed apart from each other, there is such a connection between them, as to render it difficult to say how far they may be blended together"); see

1 1800 ("the 1800 Act"),¹¹ and was intended to last 2 only five years. See generally Charles Jordan
3 Tabb, *The Historical Evolution of the Bankruptcy
4 Discharge*, 65 Am. Bankr. L.J. 325, 344-45 (1991);
5 BRUCE H. MANN, REPUBLIC OF DEBTORS (2002)
6 [hereinafter MANN]. This act was repealed in 1803.
7 There was no further federal bankruptcy law until 8 1841 ("the 1841 Act").¹² See generally Tabb, at 9 349-51. The 1841 Act lasted for an even shorter 10 time than the 1800 Act, and was repealed in 1843.
11 The next bankruptcy law was enacted in 1867 12 ("the 1867 Act")¹³ to deal with economic 13 dislocations resulting from the Civil War. See 14 generally Tabb, at 353-55. This law lasted 15 considerably longer than its predecessors, and 16 was repealed in 1878.

17 Congress enacted permanent federal 18 bankruptcy legislation in 1898 ("the 1898 Act").¹⁴
19 This law was substantially revised and expanded 20 by the Chandler Act of 1938.¹⁵ It was replaced 21 with the Bankruptcy Code in 1978 (effective 22 October 1, 1979).¹⁶

23 English law has included bankruptcy law
24 continuously since 1542, when Parliament enacted 25 the first bankruptcy law.¹⁷ The next major English bankruptcy law was enacted in 1705.¹⁸ In 1732 Parliament enacted a comprehensive codification and revision of English bankruptcy law,¹⁹ which remained in force (with amendments) at the time that the United States Constitution was written.

C. The Constitutional Convention

Before examining the English and United States statutes, we turn to the constitutional convention in 1789, to see whether there is anything in the records of the convention that might shed light on the role of insolvency in the meaning of "bankruptcies" in the Bankruptcy Clause.

The Bankruptcy Clause received little discussion in the constitutional convention. The bankruptcy issue arose in a discussion of the Full Faith and Credit clause, and drove the constitutional extension of the Full Faith and Credit clause to acts of the legislature as well as judicial decisions. See MANN, at 183; see generally id. at 182-87. Because credit, like commerce, was not limited by state boundaries, the delegates recognized that a national system of bankruptcy law was needed to support a national credit system upon which commerce depended. See id. at 185-87.

The only vote against the Bankruptcy
Clause was cast by Roger Sherman of Connecticut.
He opposed this provision on the grounds that bankruptcies were punishable by death in some cases in England, and he opposed granting Congress this power in the United States. See Railway Labor Executives' Ass'n v. Gibbons, 455
U.S. 457, 472 n.13, 102 S.Ct. 1169 (1982) (citing 2
M. FARRAND, RECORDS OF THE CONVENTION OF 1787, at 489 (1911)).

The Federalist Papers, which discuss in detail virtually every aspect of the Constitution, make only a single reference to the Bankruptcy Clause. In Federalist No. 42, James Madison wrote:

The power of establishing uniform laws of bankruptcy is so intimately connected with the regulation of commerce, and will prevent so

¹⁸4 Anne, c. 17 (1705).

¹⁹5 Geo. 2, c. 30 (1732).

1 many frauds where the parties or 2 their property may lie or be 3 removed into different States, that 4 the expediency of it seems not 5 likely to be drawn into question.

6 THE FEDERALIST No. 42, at 239 (James Madison)
7 (Clinton Rossiter ed., 1961).

8 A few decades later Justice Story (then a 9 professor at Harvard Law School), in his famous 10 Commentaries, stated:

11 Perhaps, as satisfactory a 12 description of a bankrupt law as 13 can be framed is, that it is a law 14 for the benefit and relief of 15 creditors and their debtors, in 16 cases in which the latter are 17 unable or unwilling to pay their 18 debts. And a law on the subject 19 of bankruptcies, in the sense of 20 the constitution, is a law making 21 provisions for cases of persons 22 failing to pay their debts.

23 3 JOSEPH STORY, COMMENTARIES ON THE 24 CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES § 1108 n.25.
25 (1833) [hereinafter STORY]. In Justice Story's 26 view, it is the failure to pay debts, not insolvency, 27 that distinguishes a debtor who is an eligible 28 subject for bankruptcy relief.²⁰

29 Thus the constitutional history gives no 30 support to the argument that the founders intended 31 that bankruptcy relief be limited to insolvent 32 debtors, or that this meaning was included in the 33 Bankruptcy Clause.

1 However, insolvency did not become the chief 2 basis for an involuntary petition until the adoption 3 of the Bankruptcy Code in 1978. Even now, under 4 the Bankruptcy Code, the insolvency test for an 5 involuntary petition is the liquidity test, and not the 6 balance sheet test for insolvency.²¹

1. Voluntary Cases

2 The 1841 Act was the first United States
3 law to authorize a debtor to file a voluntary 4 bankruptcy petition.²² Neither the 1800 Act nor the 5 English predecessors permitted a voluntary 6 bankruptcy filing. The 1841 Act required that a 7 bankruptcy petition be verified under oath and 8 plead that the debtor is "unable to meet [his or her] 9 debts and engagements"

10 This was only a pleading requirement.
11 Neither the parties nor the court had the authority 12 to inquire into whether a debtor was in fact 13 insolvent. See, e.g., Ex parte Hull, 12 F. Cas. 853, 14 856 (S.D.N.Y. 1842). Indeed, the court was 15 required to declare a voluntary petitioner bankrupt 16 on the debtor's sworn representation of inability to 17 pay his or her debts, irrespective of the debtor's 18 actual wealth and financial condition. See id.

19 A debtor filing a voluntary bankruptcy
20 petition under the 1867 Act was similarly required 21 to "set forth . . . his inability to pay all his debts in 22 full" See id. § 11. Immediately upon filing a 23 petition stating the debtor's inability to pay his or 24 her debts in full and the debtor's willingness to 25 surrender his or her estate and effects for the 26 benefit of creditors and a desire to obtain the 27 ²¹But see Thomas E. Plank, Bankruptcy and 28 Federalism, 71 FORD. L. REV. 1063 (2002), where he argues that "bankruptcy" inherently meant insolvency in the eighteenth century. He bases this conclusion principally on the examination of several eighteenth century dictionaries, and ignores the legal history of bankruptcy law. See id.

at 1076-77. The court finds this approach unpersuasive, in light of the contrary history of bankruptcy law at that time. Furthermore, even Professor Plank does not contend that bankruptcy meant balance sheet insolvency in 1789.

29 ²²However, it appears that debtors frequently 30 arranged with friendly creditors to file essentially 31 voluntary bankruptcy cases under the 1800
32 bankruptcy law. See MANN, supra, at 228-39.

33 benefits of the bankruptcy law, the debtor was 34 entitled to be adjudicated a bankrupt. See, e.g., In 35 re Patterson, 18 F. Cas. 1315, 1317 (S.D.N.Y.
36 1867). No further inquiry as to the debtor's ability to 37 pay was permitted. See id. at 1318.

38 The 1898 Act provided that a voluntary 39 debtor could file a bankruptcy case with no 40 requirement of insolvency. See id. § 4(a). Unlike 41 the 1841 and 1867 Acts, the 1898 Act did not 42 require a debtor to plead inability to pay his or her 43 debts as they came due. Collier explains § 4(a) as 44 follows:

45 A voluntary petitioner may be 46 solvent or insolvent, and his 47 motive is generally immaterial 48 except that the petition may not be 49 filed for purposes of perpetrating a 50 fraud. There is nothing in the Act 51 which requires the person to be 52 insolvent, and there seems to be 53 no reason why, if a solvent person
54 cares to have his property
55 distributed among his creditors 56 through bankruptcy proceedings, 57 he should not be allowed to do so 58 It will not be necessary to 59 allege insolvency in the petition, 60 nor prove it, to procure an 61 adjudication [of bankruptcy].

62 1 COLLIER ¶ 4.03 (interpreting bankruptcy law as it 63 existed before the Bankruptcy Code took effect in 64 1979); see Caplin v. Marine Midland Grace Trust
65 Co., 406 U.S. 416, 423, 92 S.Ct. 1678 (1972) 66 ("Chapter X proceedings [under the 1898 Act as 67 amended in 1938] are not limited to insolvent 68 corporations but are open to those corporations that 69 are solvent in the bankruptcy (asset-liability) sense 70 but are unable to meet their obligations as they 71 mature") (citing United States v. Key, 397 U.S. 322, 72 329, 90 S.Ct. 1049 (1970)).

73 After arising in the 1841 Act as a pleading 74 requirement, insolvency of any kind disappeared 75 entirely in 1878 (the repeal of the 1867 Act) as a 76 condition of filing a voluntary bankruptcy petition in 77 the United States.

78 Thus the statutory history shows that no 79 United States bankruptcy law has ever required a 80 voluntary debtor to show that he or she was in fact 81 insolvent, under a balance sheet test or otherwise, 82 as a prerequisite of taking advantage of bankruptcy.

1 While two of the nineteenth century acts required
2 a debtor to plead inability to pay his or her debts 3 as they came due, no creditor was permitted to 4 contest this contention.

2. Involuntary Cases

5 Similarly, insolvency has never been 6 required for a debtor to become an involuntary 7 bankrupt, either under United States bankruptcy 8 law or under its English predecessors.

9 The English bankruptcy laws prior to the 10 United States revolution uniformly provided only 11 for involuntary bankruptcy. Uniformly, also, these 12 laws made no provision for insolvency as a 13 condition of the filing of a petition in bankruptcy 14 against a debtor. Instead, these statutes 15 based the right to file an involuntary bankruptcy 16 petition on what became known as a debtor's "acts 17 of bankruptcy." Any single act of bankruptcy, 18 under each of these laws, was sufficient to support 19 an involuntary bankruptcy petition. The qualifying 20 acts included such conduct as refusing to pay 21 creditors, departing the country, staying in one's 22 house (to avoid service of process), taking 23 sanctuary, and permitting himself or herself to be 24 arrested (presumably for not paying debts). In 25 addition, the creditor was required to show that the 26 debtor took such an action with the intent to hinder 27 or delay his or her creditors.

28 Blackstone's COMMENTARIES ON THE LAWS OF ENGLAND, published in 1765 to 1769, are in accord with the English laws. Blackstone wrote extensively in his COMMENTARIES about bankruptcy law. However, like the English bankruptcy law of his time, Blackstone makes no reference to insolvency as a qualification for bankruptcy. See 2 BLACKSTONE, supra, at *471-88.

29 Blackstone's COMMENTARIES were well known to the writers of the Constitution and to early United States judges and lawyers. See 3 Hanover Nat. Bank v. Moyses, 186 U.S. 181, 187
(1902); Nelson v. Carland, 42 U.S. (1 How.) 265, 270-73 (1843) (dissenting opinion of Justice Catron).

4 In the United States, the first two 5 bankruptcy acts, the 1800 Act and 1841 Act
6 permitted a creditor to file an involuntary 7 bankruptcy petition against a debtor only if the 8 debtor had committed an act of bankruptcy that did 9 not involve the debtor's insolvency. The 1800 Act specified ten qualifying acts of bankruptcy, which largely mirrored those in the English statutes. See 1800 Act, § 1. The 1841 Act reduced to five the qualifying acts of bankruptcy. See 1841 Act, § 1.

Like their predecessor English laws, none of the qualifying acts of bankruptcy in either the 1800 or the 1841 Acts included insolvency as an element or factor to be considered in making an adjudication of bankruptcy.

10 The 1867 Act was the first to introduce 11 insolvency as an element in any of the acts of 12 bankruptcy that may support an involuntary 13 bankruptcy petition. Of the nine statutory acts of 14 bankruptcy²³ that could support an involuntary 15 petition under the 1867 Act, one was the granting of 16 a preferential transfer, "being bankrupt or insolvent, 17 or in contemplation of bankruptcy or insolvency" 18 See 1867 Act, § 39. None of the other acts of 19 bankruptcy in the 1867 Act involved the insolvency 20 of the debtor.

21 In the 1898 Act insolvency began to take a 22 prominent role in the acts of bankruptcy that could 23 support an involuntary petition. The original version 24 of the 1898 Act decreased to five the number of 25 bankruptcy acts, three of which involved insolvency.
26 See 1898 Act, § 3(a). One act of bankruptcy under 27 this law was the preferential transfer, brought 28 forward from the 1867 Act, which continued to 29 require that the debtor be insolvent. See id. § 3(a)(2). Another act of bankruptcy supporting an involuntary petition occurred when the debtor, while insolvent, suffered or permitted a creditor to obtain a preference through legal proceedings, and who further failed to discharge the preference at least five days before a sale or final disposition of any property affected by the preference. See id. § 3(a)(3). In addition, it was an act of bankruptcy to admit in writing the inability to pay debts and being willing to be adjudged a bankrupt. See id. § 3(a)(5).
Furthermore, with respect to a fraudulent transfer, the debtor was given an affirmative defense of solvency. See id. § 3(c); see generally 1 COLLIER ¶ 1.19[1].

30 Congress amended the fourth act of 31 bankruptcy (making an assignment for the benefit of 32 creditors) in 1903 to include having a receiver or 33 trustee take charge of the debtor's property while 23 Case law under the 1867 Act treated a general assignment for the benefit of creditors as a tenth act of bankruptcy. See Boese v. King, 108 U.S. 379, 385, 2 S.Ct. 765 (1883). This act of bankruptcy also did not require the debtor's insolvency.

1 the debtor was insolvent. See Act of February 5, 2 1903, 32 Stat. 797; see also In re Valentine Bohr
3 Co., 224 F. 685 (2d Cir. 1915) (dismissing 4 involuntary petition on three grounds: the debtor 5 was balance sheet solvent when the state court 6 receiver was appointed, it was impossible to 7 determine whether the district court receivership 8 was ordered "because of [balance sheet] 9 insolvency" (as the clause required for an 10 involuntary receivership), and there was no 11 evidence of a fraudulent transfer). In 1926, 12 Congress added yet a fifth act of bankruptcy 13 involving the debtor's insolvency to the 1898 Act:
14 suffering, while insolvent, a lien that was not 15 vacated or discharged within thirty days thereafter.
16 See Act of May 27, 1926, 44 Stat. 662.

17 In the 1898 Act (but not previously),
18 "insolvency" was defined. This definition adopted 19 the modified balance sheet test that now appears 20 in § 101(32)(A). See 1898 Act § 1(19); see also 21 American Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Bone, 333 F.2d 22 984, 986-87 (8th Cir. 1964) (utilizing a balance 23 sheet to show insolvency); Syracuse Engineering 24 Co. v. Haight, 110 F.2d 468, 471 (2d Cir. 1940).
25 This definition was a change from the previous 26 understanding of solvency for the purposes of 27 bankruptcy law. While the previous statutes 28 contained no definition of solvency, it was generally understood that the liquidity test applied in the bankruptcy context. See generally 1
COLLIER ¶ 1.19[1].

1 The Chandler Act in 1938, which 2 substantially amended the 1898 Act, expanded the 3 scope of the 1903 addition by applying it both 4 when the debtor was insolvent (on a modified 5 balance sheet basis) and when the debtor was 6 unable to pay his or her debts as they matured 7 (the liquidity definition). The Chandler Act also 8 revised the various reorganization provisions 9 added to the 1898 Act beginning in 1933. For 10 these provisions (the predecessors of chapter 11), 11 the liquidity definition of insolvency was ordinarily 12 invoked.

13 Throughout the career of the 1898 Act
14 (which was repealed effective September 30, 15 1979), making a general assignment for the benefit 16 of creditors was an act of bankruptcy that did not 17 require the insolvency of the debtor. See id. § 18 3(a)(4).

19 The Bankruptcy Code, while reducing to 20 two the acts of bankruptcy that can support an 21 involuntary petition, continues to permit an 22 involuntary bankruptcy notwithstanding a debtor's 23

24 solvency. The Code permits a court to order relief 25 against the debtor if, within 120 days of the filing of 26 the petition, a custodian, receiver or agent is 27 appointed or takes possession of less than 28 substantially all of the debtor's property to enforce a lien. See § 303(h)(2).

29 However, virtually every involuntary petition 30 filed under the Bankruptcy Code relies on § 31 303(h)(1),²⁴ which authorizes an involuntary case 32 where the debtor "is generally not paying such 33 debtor's debts as such debts become due unless 34 such debts are the subject of a bona fide dispute . . .".
35 Thus insolvency is now a major factor in an 36 involuntary bankruptcy case. But it is the liquidity 37 definition of insolvency that controls, and not the 38 balance sheet definition on which Pierce relies.

39 The court concludes from the foregoing 40 history that, at the time that the Constitution was 41 written, insolvency of any kind was utterly unknown 42 as a requirement for filing a bankruptcy case. Thus 43 it is not credible that the framers of the Constitution 44 thought that a requirement of insolvency was 45 included in the concept of bankruptcy that found its 46 way into the Bankruptcy Clause. Furthermore, 47 insolvency has never been a statutory requirement 48 for either voluntary or involuntary bankruptcy under 49 United States bankruptcy law. Finally, balance 50 sheet insolvency was altogether unknown for 51 bankruptcy purposes in the United States until 52 1898.

E. Watershed Developments in Bankruptcy Concepts

53 The development of bankruptcy law did not 54 end with the writing of the Bankruptcy Clause in the 55 United States Constitution in 1787. There are three 56 watershed developments in United States 57 bankruptcy law since that date.

58 The first major development, which was 59 introduced in the 1841 Act, was the authorization 60 for a debtor to file a voluntary bankruptcy case 61 without waiting for a creditor to file an involuntary 62 petition against the debtor. Justice Catron, sitting ²⁴As a bankruptcy judge for nearly twenty years, I have handled nearly a hundred thousand bankruptcy cases. Perhaps two hundred of these cases have commenced with involuntary bankruptcy petitions. I can recall only one that probably was based on § 303(h)(2).

1 on circuit in the district of Missouri, found this 2 provision constitutional in In re Klein, 14 F. Cas.
3 716, 718 (1843), reported in a note to Nelson v.
4 Carland, 42 U.S. (1 How.) 265, 277 (1843). The Supreme Court cited Klein with approval on this issue in Hanover Nat'l Bank v. Moyses, 186 U.S.
181, 186 (1902).

5 The second landmark major development, 6 also adopted in the 1841 Act, was the extension of 7 the bankruptcy law to individuals who are not traders. The Supreme Court approved this development also in Moyses, 186 U.S. at 186, again relying on Klein.

8 The third major landmark development 9 was the addition of reorganization as a mode of 10 bankruptcy authorized under the Bankruptcy Clause. This first reorganization provision 11 appeared in United States law in the Act of March 12 3, 1933, which was signed by President Hoover on 13 his last day in office.²⁵ The Supreme Court 14 validated the constitutionality of reorganization 15 under the Bankruptcy Clause in Continental Illinois
Nat. Bank & Trust Co. v. Chicago, R.I. & P. Ry., 294 U.S. 648, 668, 55 S.Ct. 595 (1935) (railroad reorganization under § 77 of the 1898 Act as amended in 1933); accord, United States v. Bekins (In re Lindsay-Strathmore Irrigation Dist.), 304 U.S.
27, 47, 58 S.Ct. 811 (1938).

16 Each of these provisions constituted a 17 landmark change in bankruptcy law from that known in 1787 when the Bankruptcy Clause was written into the Constitution. In the words of the 18 Supreme Court itself, these extensions of bankruptcy law were of a "fundamental and radically progressive nature." Louisville Joint Stock Land Bank v. Radford, 295 U.S. 555, 588, 55 S.Ct. 854 (1935) (quoting Continental Illinois, 294 U.S. at 671). Nonetheless, the Supreme Court found that each of these developments comes within the ambit of the Bankruptcy Power, and thus is constitutional. Radford, 295 U.S. at 587-88; Continental Illinois, 294 U.S. at 671.

23 More generally, the Supreme Court has 24 very recently stated that the Constitution should not be restricted to a particular generation's interpretation of the Constitution: "As the 25 Constitution endures, persons in every generation can invoke its principles in their own search for greater freedom." Lawrence v. Texas, ____ U.S.

27 ²⁵The various reorganization provisions enacted 28 over several years beginning in 1933 were substantially revised in the Chandler Act of 1938.

____, 123 S.Ct. 2472, 2484 (2003) (finding due process violation in Texas statute prohibiting same-sex sodomy).

In contrast to these landmark bankruptcy law changes, the filing of a bankruptcy case by or with respect to a solvent debtor has always been permitted under bankruptcy law, both under every bankruptcy law enacted in the United States and under every prior law enacted in England.

F. Supreme Court Case Law

Supreme Court case law likewise gives no support to the thesis that, as a constitutional matter, congressional power to provide bankruptcy protection must be limited to those who are insolvent, whether under a balance sheet test or otherwise.²⁶ Even if the English bankruptcy law in effect in 1787 had limited bankruptcy to debtors who satisfied an insolvency test, this would not be determinative in this case more than two centuries later.

1. Expansive Supreme Court Statements

The United States Supreme Court has consistently taken an expansive view of the Bankruptcy Powers, to permit their application in the context of the enormous expansion of the economy since 1787 and the correspondingly great elaboration of the legal structures supporting it:

[T]he notion that the framers of the Constitution, by the bankruptcy clause, intended to limit the power of Congress to the then existing English law and practice upon the subject long since has been dispelled. . . . Whether a clause in the Constitution is to be restricted by the rules of the English law as they existed when the Constitution was adopted depends upon the terms or the nature of the particular clause in question.

²⁶The court has found no relevant case law from the Ninth Circuit or the Ninth Circuit Bankruptcy Appellate Panel.

Continental Illinois, at 668. The Supreme Court has repeatedly and consistently held that the Bankruptcy Powers are not limited to the meaning of the term "bankruptcy" at the time of the formulation of the Constitution. See, e.g., Wright v. Union Central Life Ins. Co., 304 U.S. 502 (1938); Adair v. Bank of America NTSA, 303 U.S. 350, 354, 58 S.Ct. 594 (1938); Hanover National Bank, at 187 ("The framers of the Constitution were familiar with Blackstone's Commentaries, and with the bankrupt laws of England, yet they granted plenary power to Congress over the whole subject of 'bankruptcies,' and did not limit it by the language [that they] used.")

The core of the federal bankruptcy power, according to the Supreme Court, is "the restructuring of debtor-creditor relations" Northern Pipeline Construction Co. v. Marathon Pipe Line Co., 458 U.S. 50, 71, 102 S.Ct. 2858 (1982) (plurality opinion). Beyond this core, as a general rule, the Supreme Court has said, "the subject of bankruptcies is incapable of final definition." Gibbons, 455 U.S. at 466; accord Wright v. Union Central, 304 U.S. at 513; Continental Illinois, 294 U.S. at 669-70 ("[t]hose limitations have never been explicitly defined, and any attempt to do so now would result in little more than a paraphrase of the language of the Constitution without advancing far toward its full meaning."). In Gibbons the Supreme Court stated:

[W]e have previously defined "bankruptcy" as the subject of the relations between an insolvent or nonpaying or fraudulent debtor and his creditors, extending to his and their relief. Congress' power under the Bankruptcy Clause contemplates an adjustment of a failing debtor's obligations. This power extends to all cases where the law causes to be distributed, the property of the debtor among his creditors. It includes the power to discharge the debtor from his contracts and legal liabilities, as well as to distribute his property. The grant to Congress involves the power to impair the obligation of contracts, and this the States were forbidden to do.

In Moyses, the Court added that the debtor "may be, in fact, fraudulent, and able and unwilling to pay his debts; but the law takes him at his word, and makes effectual provision, not only by civil, but even by criminal, process, to effectuate his alleged intent of giving up all his property." Id. at 861. Thus the "subject of bankruptcies" includes the power to discharge a debtor from contracts and legal liabilities, and to distribute the debtor's property to creditors. Id. at 188 (upholding the constitutionality of the Bankruptcy Act of 1898 insofar as it authorized the discharge of a judgment on a promissory note). The Court in Moyses also stated: "all intermediate legislation, affecting substance and form, but tending to further the great end of the subject, — distribution and discharge, — are in the competency and discretion of Congress." Id. at 186 (quoting In re Klein, 14 F. Cas. No. 716 (D. Mo. 1843), reprinted in a note to Nelson v. Carland, 42 U.S. (1 How.) 265, 277, 11 L.Ed. 126, 130 (1843)).

The Court further stated in Continental Illinois that bankruptcy "may be construed to include a debtor who, although unable to pay promptly, may be able to pay if time to do so be sufficiently extended," i.e., a solvent debtor. Id. at 668. There is no reason to believe that the bankruptcy laws of the nineteenth century exhausted congressional power under the Bankruptcy Clause. See id.

The Supreme Court has also spoken on the essential purposes of chapter 11, under which the debtors filed this case. In NLRB v. Bildisco & Bildisco, 465 U.S. 513, 527, 104 S.Ct. 1188 (1984), the Court stated that the policy of chapter 11 is to permit the successful rehabilitation of debtors. The Court elaborated this policy in Toibb v. Ratliff, 501 U.S. 157, 111 S.Ct. 2197 (1991), to state that one Congressional purpose of chapter 11 is "permitting business debtors to reorganize and restructure their debts in order to revive the debtors' businesses and thereby preserve jobs and protect investors." Id. at 163. In addition, the Court said in that case:

Chapter 11 also embodies the general Code policy of maximizing the value of the bankruptcy estate. Under certain circumstances a consumer debtor's estate will be worth more if reorganized under Chapter 11 than if liquidated under

1 Chapter 7. Allowing such a 2 debtor to proceed under Chapter 3 11 serves the congressional 4 purpose of deriving as much value as possible from the debtor's estate.

5 Id. The Court used this rationale in Toibb to hold 6 that individual consumers, like the debtors in this 7 case, are entitled to take advantage of chapter 11 8 to reorganize their financial affairs, even though 9 they may have no business to reorganize. See id.
10 at 160-66.

11 Similarly, in *Bank of America NTSA v. 203
N. LaSalle St. P'ship*, 526 U.S. 434, 119 S.Ct.
1411 (1999), the Court stated that, "the two 12 recognized policies underlying Chapter 11 [are] 13 preserving going concerns and maximizing 14 property available to satisfy creditors . . ." Id. at 15 453.

16 The debtors in this case at least qualify as 17 "nonpaying" debtors, in the terminology of 18 Gibbons, and they certainly appeared to be failing 19 when they filed their case. If they enjoy a bonanza 20 from their chapter 11 plan, it will result from 21 Pierce's refusal to file a claim on his $12 million 22 Texas judgment.

23 Furthermore, the court finds that the 24 chapter 11 plan in this case maximizes the 25 property available to satisfy creditors. At the time 26 of filing, it was not at all clear that the debtors 27 could pay their creditors in full. The plan settles 28 this issue.

2. Cases Finding Bankruptcy Provisions Unconstitutional

29 There are very few Supreme Court cases 30 holding that Congress has exceeded its 31 constitutional powers in legislating on the subject 32 of bankruptcy. In light of the foregoing expansive 33 descriptions of Congress' powers under the 34 Bankruptcy Clause, these cases shed little light on 35 any relevant limitations on Congress' Bankruptcy 36 Powers.

37 Perhaps the best known case holding 38 unconstitutional a provision of bankruptcy law is Louisville Joint Stock Land Bank v. Radford, 295
39 U.S. 555 (1935), which invalidated the Frazier-40 Lemke addition to the 1898 Act that permitted a 41 farmer to pay rent instead of mortgage payments for 42 five years and then retire the mortgage by paying 43 only the (likely reduced) fair market value of the 44 property. The principal vice of this provision, the 45 Supreme Court found, was that Congress applied it 46 only to mortgages existing on the date of 47 enactment, and thus it constituted a taking of 48 existing property rights of mortgage holders in 49 violation of the Just Compensation clause of the 50 Fifth Amendment.²⁷ See id. at 589-602.

51 In Railway Labor Executives' Ass'n v. Gibbons, 455 U.S. 457, 469-73 (1982), the 52 Supreme Court held that bankruptcy legislation 53 explicitly applying to a single (albeit large) debtor, 54 and no other similarly situated debtors, 55 unconstitutionally violated the uniformity 56 requirement of the Bankruptcy Clause. A 57 bankruptcy law, the Supreme Court held, must at 58 least apply uniformly to a defined class of debtors.
59 See id. at 473. But see Regional Rail Reorganization Cases, 419 U.S. 102, 158-60, 95 60 S.Ct. 335 (1974) (holding that bankruptcy statute 61 governing railroad reorganization in one region did 62 not violate Uniformity Clause when no railroad 63 reorganization was pending outside that region).
64 Similarly, the Ninth Circuit has held that § 317(a) of 65 the Judicial Improvements Act of 1990, which 66 authorizes bankruptcy administrators (employed by 67 the judicial branch) to substitute for United States 68 Trustees (employed in the Department of Justice) in 69 two states alone (North Carolina and Alabama) 70 violates the Uniformity Clause. See *St. Angelo v.
Victoria Farms, Inc.*, 38 F.3d 1525, 1531-32 (9th Cir.
71 1994).

73 ²⁷See also United States v. Security Industrial Bank, 459 U.S. 70, 103 S.Ct. 407 (1982), where the Supreme Court construed narrowly the provision in § 522(f) that permits a debtor to avoid the fixing of a lien on an interest of the debtor in property, to the extent that the lien impairs an exemption. The Court held that, to avoid a likely violation of the Just Compensation Clause of the Fifth Amendment, this provision must not permit the avoidance of liens existing before its enactment. See id. at 82. But see Webber v. Credithrift (In re Webber), 674 F.2d 796 (9th Cir. 1982), in which the Ninth Circuit held that a debtor may take advantage of § 522(f) to avoid the fixing of a lien on an interest in property that impaired an exemption, where the lien had been fixed before the effective date of the Bankruptcy Code (and § 522(f)) but after the enactment of the Code. See id. at 803-04.

1 In Granfinanciera, S.A. v. Nordberg, 492
2 U.S. 33, 109 S.Ct. 2782 (1989), the Supreme 3 Court held that the bankruptcy power did not 4 permit Congress to eliminate a party's Seventh 5 Amendment jury trial right by relabeling the cause 6 of action and assigning it to a specialized court in 7 equity. Id. at 61. Also well known is Northern 8 Pipeline, where the Supreme Court found in 1982 9 that the Bankruptcy Clause did not authorize 10 Congress to grant bankruptcy jurisdiction to courts 11 lacking Article III tenure.

12 There are also very few lower court 13 decisions finding a bankruptcy law provision 14 unconstitutional. There is one contemporary 15 example. A battle rages among lower courts today 16 on whether rights clearly legislated under the 17 Bankruptcy Clause can be enforced under § 18 105(a) in federal court against state governments 19 in light of the Eleventh Amendment 20 (constitutionalizing state sovereign immunity) and 21 case law thereunder. In *Hood v. Tennessee
22 Student Assistance Corp. (In re Hood)*, 319 F.3d
23 755, 761-68 (6th Cir.), cert. granted, ___ U.S. __, __ 24 S.Ct. __ (2003), the Sixth Circuit held that the 25 Bankruptcy Clause authorized Congress, 26 notwithstanding the Eleventh Amendment, to 27 abrogate state sovereign immunity in bankruptcy 28 matters. In contrast, the following circuit court 29 decisions have held that the Eleventh Amendment 30 prevents Congress from abrogating state 31 sovereign immunity in bankruptcy matters: Nelson 32 v. La Crosse County Dist. Attorney (In re Nelson), 33 301 F.3d 820, 832 (7th Cir. 2002); *Mitchell v.
34 Franchise Tax Bd. (In re Mitchell)*, 209 F.3d 1111, 35 1121 (9th Cir. 2000); *Sacred Heart Hosp. v.
36 Pennsylvania (In re Sacred Heart Hosp.)*, 133 F.3d
37 237, 243 (3d Cir. 1998); *Fernandez v. PNL Asset
38 Mgmt. Co. LLC (In re Fernandez)*, 123 F.3d 241, 39 243 (5th Cir.), amended by 130 F.3d 1138, 1139 40 (5th Cir. 1997); Schlossberg v. Maryland (In re 41 Creative Goldsmiths), 119 F.3d 1140, 1145-46 (4th 42 Cir. 1997).

43 This case today does not require the court
44 to determine the limits of the Bankruptcy Powers 45 granted to the federal government in the 46 Constitution. Accordingly, the court leaves this 47 issue to another day.

48
49 G. Substantive Due Process

50 Pierce contends that Howard's bankruptcy
51 case deprives him of his substantive due process

52 rights, thereby invoking "dormant" substantive 53 economic due process rights that have disappeared 54 from Supreme Court jurisprudence since the 55 1930's. The Fifth Amendment provides, in relevant 56 part, "nor shall any person . . . be deprived of life, 57 liberty or property, without due process of law"

58 Under this theory, the Fifth Amendment is a 59 limitation on the scope of "the subject of 60 bankruptcies."

61 Recent Supreme Court decisions make it 62 clear that substantive due process is alive and well 63 in its jurisprudence, insofar as it concerns individual 64 rights and liberties. See, e.g., Lawrence v. Texas, 65 __ U.S. __, 123 S.Ct. 2472, 2484 (2003) (finding 66 due process violation in Texas statute prohibiting 67 same-sex sodomy). In contrast, substantive 68 economic due process remains sound asleep in 69 Supreme Court jurisprudence. Thus, entirely apart 70 from the particular controversy before this court, 71 Pierce faces a steep uphill climb to invoke 72 substantive economic due process.

73 Apparently the only Supreme Court case 74 addressing substantive due process rights in the 75 bankruptcy context is *Canada Southern Ry. v.
76 Gebhard*, 109 U.S. 527, 3 S.Ct. 363 (1883), where 77 New York bondholders challenged a Canadian 78 railroad "scheme of arrangement" specially 79 authorized by Canadian statute. The bondholders 80 had not participated in the Canadian proceeding.
81 The Court found that the scheme was "no more 82 than is done in bankruptcy" in the United States, 83 and thus that the scheme should be enforced in a 84 United States court against all creditors. See id. at 85 537-40. Thus the Supreme Court rejected the 86 substantive due process challenge to the 87 arrangement. See id. at 537.

88 Procedural due process rights under the 89 Fifth Amendment clearly apply in the bankruptcy 90 context. In Hanover Nat. Bank v. Moyses, 186 U.S.
91 181, 187, 22 S.Ct. 857 (1902), for example, the 92 Supreme Court found that the notice requirements 93 of the Fifth Amendment Due Process Clause 94 applied and were satisfied. The Court rejected the 95 contention that personal notice of the filing was 96 required. The Court found that bankruptcy
97 proceedings are, generally speaking, in the nature 98 of proceedings in rem, for which notice by 99 publication and mail satisfy due process 100 requirements. Pierce does not complain of 101 procedural due process violations in this case.

102 The court finds it unnecessary to explore in 103 detail the constitutional consequences of 104 bankruptcy legislation that falls outside the

1 Bankruptcy Powers of the Constitution. If this case
2 were to fall outside the scope of the Bankruptcy 3 Clause, the court assumes without deciding that 4 the law would violate some constitutional 5 provision. However, the court does not reach this 6 issue because the court finds that Congress has 7 the power under the Bankruptcy Clause to 8 determine that a debtor may invoke rights under 9 the Bankruptcy Code to adjust obligations with 10 creditors before the debtor becomes insolvent 11 under a balance sheet test.

12 The larger constitutional issue concerns 13 the power to extinguish debts and cancel 14 contractual obligations. Under the Articles of 15 Confederation, the states possessed and used this 16 power, to the consternation of many. See 17 Alexander Hamilton, THE FEDERALIST No. 85, 18 praising the new constitution's "precautions 19 against the repetition of those practices on the part 20 of the State governments which have undermined 21 the foundations of property and credit, have 22 planted mutual distrust in the breasts of all classes 23 of citizens, and have occasioned an almost 24 universal prostration of morals." The states, 25 because they were sovereign, possessed broad 26 power to discharge debts and contractual 27 obligations.

28 What has happened to this power? The 1 grand bargain of 1787 was that states surrendered 2 it to the new federal government in exchange for 3 the checks and balances of a federal system that 4 would restrain the new national legislature from 5 unwise debt forgiveness. Moyses, 186 U.S. at 6 187. Thus, the grant of power to Congress over 7 the "subject of bankruptcies" in Article I, Section 8 8 is balanced with the prohibition in Article I, Section 9 10, forbidding states from impairing the obligation 10 of contracts. The power to discharge debts and 11 contractual obligations was not extinguished: it 12 was surrendered to the federal government. See 13 id.

14 There is a significant difference, with 15 respect to the Bankruptcy Power, between 16 property interests and contract rights. See 17 Webber v. Credithrift (In re Webber), 674 F.2d 18 796, 802 (9th Cir. 1982). In the bankruptcy 19 context, property rights enjoy at least a measure of 20 protection under the Due Process and Just 21 Compensation Clauses of the Fifth Amendment.
22 See, e.g., Louisville Joint Stock Land Bank v.
23 Radford, 295 U.S. 555, 55 S.Ct. 854 (1935) (just 24 compensation); United States v. Security Industrial 25 Bank, 459 U.S. 70, 103 S.Ct. 407 (1982) (same).

26 On the other hand, Congress is not prohibited from 27 passing laws that impair the obligation of contracts.
28 See, e.g., Continental Bank v. Rock Island Ry., 294
1 U.S. 648, 680, 55 S.Ct. 595 (1935); Webber, 674 2 F.2d at 802. "In fact, the very essence of 3 bankruptcy laws is the modification or impairment of 4 contractual obligations." Webber, 674 F.2d at 802.

5 The protection of property rights in the 6 bankruptcy context, however, is measured. The 7 Supreme Court made this clear in Wright v. Union
8 Central Life Ins. Co., 304 U.S. 502, 58 S.Ct. 1025
9 (1938):

10 Property rights do not gain any 11 absolute inviolability in the 12 bankruptcy court because created 13 and protected by state law. Most 14 property rights are so created and 15 protected. But if Congress is 16 acting within its bankruptcy power, 17 it may authorize the bankruptcy
18 court to affect these property 19 rights, provided the limitations of 20 the due process clause are 21 observed.

22 Id. at 518.

23 In this case, Pierce has neither property 24 rights nor contract rights to assert against the 25 debtors. He does not even have a claim against 26 the debtors in this case, because he refused to file 27 his claim. He has only a Texas state court 28 judgment that is on appeal. This claim is in danger 1 of discharge if the debtors' chapter 11 plan is 2 confirmed. The court finds that this is an insufficient 3 basis to find a violation of Pierce's Fifth Amendment 4 economic substantive due process rights in this 5 case.

IV. Conclusion

1 The court concludes that Pierce's 2 constitutional challenge to the debtors' bankruptcy
3 case and their plan of reorganization under chapter 4 11 cannot be sustained. The court finds that the 5 balance sheet test for insolvency was unknown in 6 United States bankruptcy law until 1898, when 7 balance sheet insolvency first entered United States 8 bankruptcy law. Prior thereto, insolvency in the 9 bankruptcy context always meant liquidity (or equity) insolvency.

The court finds that Congress validly exercised the Bankruptcy Powers under the Constitution to authorize a debtor who is solvent, whether in the balance sheet sense or in the liquidity sense, to file a chapter 11 case and to confirm a plan of reorganization.

The court has previously found against Pierce on his statutory objections to the chapter 11 plan and on his motion to dismiss based on bad faith. Accordingly, the court finds that the chapter 11 plan should be confirmed and the motion to dismiss should be denied.
